TO BAN OR RECYCLE?

State legislation would promote recycling—but environmentalists say it doesn't go far enough

Chicago Tribune

As several U.S. cities move to ban plastic bags, Illinois is a signature away from its own law to regulate the omnipresent carryout sacks that so often wind up as breeze-borne litter.

But in a twist on the usual reaction to this type of government oversight, the proposal has business-community backing but is opposed by many environmental groups.

The plan, approved by state lawmakers last week and awaiting action by Gov. Quinn, would require plastic bag manufacturers to set up collection and recycling programs, pay fees and register with the state. Individual communities—with the exception of Chicago—would be prohibited from enacting their own laws to impose taxes on the use of plastic bags or ban them outright.

Environmentalists, who point to reusable bags as the greener option, say the law would unfairly tie the hands of local governments, which in several West Coast communities have led the way in banning plastic bags.

"It's a wolf in sheep's clothing," said Max Muller, program director for Environment Illinois. "I think we're being scammed."

Sponsors say the program proposed in Illinois would have a bigger impact than varying efforts in a few communities and provide uniformity that would help businesses avoid the logistical headaches of a patchwork of different regulations.

"I think we should be lauded for our efforts instead of having people criticize our efforts," said state Sen. Terry Link, a Vernon Hills Democrat and sponsor of the bill. Like curbside recycling, he said, it will take time for the habit to catch on.

Plastic bags were introduced at grocery store checkout counters in the 1970s and since have become ubiquitous. The Worldwatch Institute, a Washington-based environmental group, says global manufacturers create up to 5 trillion plastic bags a year, and Americans throw away 100 billion of them.

The bags became a target of environmentalists because of the fossil fuels used to create them, the litter problem they create and the harm they cause wildlife that swallows or gets tangled up in them. Some countries have begun to tax the use of the bags or prohibit them outright.

The number of bag bans nationwide reached 63 last year, by the count of industry trade publication plasticsnews.com. Some laws impose fines of 5 to 20 cents per bag for customers who use them. Last month, L.A. became the largest city in the U.S. to ban plastic bags at supermarket checkout lines, forcing shoppers to bring their own bags or pay 10 cents for a paper bag.

Under the Illinois plan, bag manufacturers would have to register with the state and submit a recycling plan that includes a public education component by July 1, 2013. The manufacturers can include existing retail collection efforts as part of their plans.

The Illinois Environment Protection Agency is charged with overseeing the program, including posting the plans online with a 30-day period for public comment and manufacturer feedback. Each manufacturer is also supposed to file an annual report on the results of their programs starting in 2014.

The goal is to increase the recycling rate by at least 12 percent by 2015. The penalty for failing to comply with the act is a fine of up to $1,000.

Quinn isn't saying whether he'll sign the proposed law.

The Wall Street Journal reported this week that the social networking giant is developing a way for children under 13 years old to use the I'm pretty annoyed by this development, but not for the reasons you think. See, it's kind of crappy that all my current Facebook friends weren't around to witness my entire development. I mean, my LiveJournal still is out there somewhere I think (my condolences to anyone who takes the time to find it-it was horrible), but being able to broadcast my mundane existence to a wide audience when I was a young warthog would have been amazing!

To remedy this, I dug up some important moments from my life that I think would have made for some legendary Facebook status updates. Enjoy! (And don't thank me. I do this for the streets.)

THINK WAXING SERVICES ARE JUST FOR WOMEN? THINK AGAIN

By Mick Swasko

REDEYE

The groom who wants the initials of his bride-to-be emblazoned in jewels near his nether region.

The man who orders a full Brazilian wax (except for a "landing strip" dyed electric blue).

The couple who compete over the bling they have adhered to their lower abdomens.

Melodi Serna, general manager at Tease Salon and Spa in Pilsen, has seen it all. And she's not judging.

While male grooming and manscaping has been an accepted practice for years, the idea of a full Brazilian—or the removal of all pubic hair using hot wax—has seen a surge in only the past two or three.

Men in Chicago—straight and gay alike—are increasingly opting for specialty grooming services that until recently might have been considered taboo or for women only, specialists say. Serna, for example, has seen requests for pubic waxes rise 60 percent during the past year.

On top of that, some guys are going a step further and ordering a procedure in which glitter tattoos, colorful dyes or small jewels are applied around their genitals. Serna said appointments for that technique—known alternately as bedazzling, manjazzling or pejazzling—are scheduled in her shop about once a week.

And while specific statistics on the waxing industry's male clientele aren't available, Serna's experience is hardly unique.

Whether a reflection of media images of hairless men, a reaction to a significant other's requests for a smoother treatment or just a matter of general hygiene, the male Brazilian is big business, according to salon workers around Chicago.

Prices for the service vary. At Tease, it costs about $55 for Brazilian waxing, with additional bedazzling services starting at $15.

"Men are just being more conscious of grooming," said Collete Green, owner of Collete Salon and Spa in the Gold Coast, adding that there's no real target demographic for the service. "A lot of times people associate gay men [with] getting Brazilian waxing, but all men are getting waxing services."

Green said male clients have ordered waxes since the spa opened 18 years ago, but it's only been in the past three years that demand has climbed. Three years ago, the spa saw a couple of appointments for male Brazilians per-month. Now, Green has about five booked per week. She even has a dedicated staff member who specializes in the service. Beyond the pubic waxing, chest, leg, shoulder and back waxing also are popular, she said. Many times, men come in for one service and end up adding more.

"If you want your cheeks, that's extra," she Julio Mendez, 32, of Ravenswood considers his waxes as common as a haircut.

"I think it's not necessarily a vanity thing, it's leaning toward hygiene and cleanliness," he said, adding that he's been waxing regularly since he first had it done while in school to become an aesthetician 14 years ago. He said he's never been embarrassed to have the treatment done, except for one failed attempt to try to wax himself.

And though some men choose to keep quiet, he said finding a trusted professional and sticking with them, as he has, is the best Bro-zilians, pejazzles and Speedo waxes-three terms that were foreign to the male vernacular even 10 years ago. Today, extreme male grooming isn't outside the norm. RedEve asked three nightlife and entertainment types to weigh in on the subject.

way to ensure a good experience.

"You want to find someone you trust to do it; if not, it can be a big disaster," he said.

Mendez says he sees all types of men getting the procedure at the Chicago Male Salon in Lakeview, but one thing remains the same: The process doesn't come without a

"There's some guys where they've had a Brazilian and they are climbing the walls (in pain]," he said. "And others who are fine."

That's where some tricks of the trade come in. Most salon owners recommend taking a few Tylenol before a wax but say to avoid the temptation to have a few drinks, as alcohol thins the blood.

For the particularly squeamight get hives from anticipatory nerves-an antihistamine also can help. Men also should avoid trimming or manscaping for at least several weeks before making an appointclean and showered the day of the wax.

But it's not for everyone. While Green says most men say they enjoy the "clean" feeling a Brazilian provides, some men say a full wax goes too far.

"I can understand where there needs to be manscaping, but I don't understand where all the sudden the idea that men need to be smooth came from," said Michael Roche, 35, of Wicker Park.

Roche said he pays close attention to his grooming habits and has regularly gotten back and shoulder waxes for years.

But the idea of a full wax-or getting the bedazzled treatment-isn't for him.

"If I wanted my junk to look like Elton John circa 1977, I suppose I would do it," he said. "I don't think it's wrong, it's just definitely not for me."

Despite the navsayers, Serna said she's made skeptics into believers.

"We tell men, once you get waxed, you never go back," she said.

AN ASTRONOMER TO ENJOY RARE EVENT

Chicago Tribune

Amateur Chicago-area astronomers turned their heads skyward Tuesday evening to catch a glimpse of a pinprick-size disc-Venus floating past the sun.

The planet's orbit carried it between the Earth and the sun, producing a celestial phenomenon that won't happen again until 2117. The so-called transit of Venus occurs twice on an eight-year interval every 100 years or so.

"This is really kind of cool," Lombard resident John Kerekes, 45, said during a viewing event at the Wheaton College observatory. "It's very cool actually."

Hundreds waited in line on the Adler Planetarium lawn to look through one of the many telescopes provided by volunteers, even when the sun was descending into a valley between the Willis Tower and the rest of the skyline. A man on his bike, peering at an image of the sun on a projection box, called out to a couple fumbling with a camera phone when the angular silhouette of the tower blocked the sun.

"That's it. It's gone," he said. "And no one here will ever see it again."

Though rare, the transits have captured scientists' interest for centuries. Because of Venus' relatively close proximity to Earth, astronomers of the past used data from the transits to help calculate the distance from Earth to the sun, and from that, the distance between other planets in the solar system.

European nations in the 18th century dispatched explorers to far-flung corners of the Earth to gather the necessary data for those equations, said Mark Hammergren, an astronomer at Adler Planetarium.

After the transits of 1874 and 1882-events so momentous they were commemorated with an original march by John Philip Sousa-scientists were able to compile data from transits in three centuries.

By the 1960s, when astronomers could use sophisticated telescopes, radar systems and satellites to determine the distance from the Earth to the sun, they discovered that their predecessors in the t88os-who used only sextants and trigonometry-had come within I percent of accurately measuring the distance (93 million miles, for those planning a trip).

The 21st century transits will provide astronomers with data that can help identify planets outside the solar system, and determine facts about those planets' atmospheres, Hammergren said.

People will respond to it. ... Both have complications. It's not like one's complicated and the other isn't."

With the Bears using him more on offense, Hester likely sticking to punts

Chicago Tribune

Devin Hester remains too dynamic and explosive to reach the point of no returns, but kickoffs might not be his forte in 2012.

Coach Lovie Smith mentioned the luxury of being able to relieve Hester from kickoff returns after the team signed veterans Eric Weems and Devin Thomas. The Bears also seem intent on implementing a "Hester package" on offense that could necessitate limiting Hester's special teams workload.

"I think every now and then, I'm going to do kickoffs," said Hester, who still is expected to handle most punt returns. "It will depend on how the game is going,

"If I'm involved in the offense the whole first and second quarters, maybe I'll tell them to cut back on the kickoff returns. If I'm not getting that many touches on offense, of course I'm going to want to get some more touches on kickoff returns. That's how I see things panning out."

Hester led the league in punt-return average last season at 16.2 yards but was 24th on kickoffs at 21.9. Thomas, who played for the Super Bowl champion. N.Y. Giants last season, ranked 14th at 24.3. Weems, formerly of Atlanta, finished 18th at 23.5.

"Eric is a Pro Bowl special teams guy," Hester said. "He has returned kicks. He has returned punts. When I watch [Thomas] return kickoffs in practice, he looks like he's really good at it."

The Bears already have discussed using Weems as the primary kickoff returner, particularly with Johnny Knox (spinal fusion surgery) likely out of the mix. Weems has 113-career kickoff returns for 2,896 yards (25.6 yards per return) with a 102-yard touchdown and seven returns of 40-plus yards.

"It's a good thing between [Hester] and I," Weems said. "We're been splitting things so far in practice. Whichever way it is during the season, teams will have to pick their poison.

"Devin, he's a speed guy-quickness and speed. He likes to get around the edges and make people miss. I'm more of a hit-it returner. I just hit it hard."

Hester has an NFL-record 17 return touchdowns in 92 games, 12 off punts. He averaged 35.6 yards on 12 kickoff returns in 2010, which provides a reason for the Bears to keep him in the mix.

But the new kickoff rules have taken some of the luster away from players such as Hester. According to the Elias Sports Bureau, the percentage of touchbacks on kickoffs increased from 16.4 percent in 2010 to 43.5 percent last season under rules that stipulate kickoffs from the 35-yard line rather than the 30.

Billy's show

Reality series about Corgan's wrestling league in the works

ReEve

Billy Corgan's love of wrestling led him to create Resistance Pro Wrestling, which has been holding events in Chicago since November.

Now, he wants a reality television show to document Resistance Pro Wrestling.

"We just signed a deal with a big reality show producer," Corgan told MLW Radio Network. "A guy with an incredible track record. We're in good hands. ... We believe that wrestling is fascinating on many, many levels—socially, politically, even economically. The struggles independent wrestlers go through to try to find work, those are real struggles that anybody can identify with."

The series, Corgan said, won't focus on the action in the ring.

"We want to show what goes on in a wrestling company behind the scenes," he said.

"I've had like nine or 10 meetings so far about it with different people. A lot of them wanted to know if this would be your typical manufactured reality show, and I told them that with a wrestling company, you don't have to manufacture reality. There's plenty of it to go around."

Welcome back, Kelly Hogan.

More than a decade after the release of her last solo work, "Because It Feel Good," the singer makes a long-overdue return to the spotlight with her excellent new album, "I Like to Keep Myself in Pain," a gorgeous effort steeped in classic country and soul.

Not that the longtime Chicagoan, who currently makes her home in Evansville, Wis., hasn't kept herself plenty busy. She remains a staple in friend and musical compatriot Neko Case's touring band and has performed alongside everyone from My Morning Jacket to soul legend Mavis Staples. Fittingly, a number of Hogan's former collaborators return the favor on her new record, which features songwriting contributions from M. Ward, Robyn Hitchcock, Andrew Bird and the late Vic Chesnutt, among others.

Reached at home in Wisconsin, Hogan, 47, discussed the thrill of recording alongside Staples, why she always preferred Tonto to the Lone Ranger and the genesis of the Hideout's Wooden Leg cocktail.

What artists submitted songs that you couldn't quite find room for on this record?

Well, we recorded 15 songs, so there are two songs from the session that didn't make it on. One is by the great Edith Frost, and one is by Chicago's own Wilco. Jeff [Tweedy] gave me ["Open Mind"], then they ended up putting it on their record, too. So we're like, "Well, we'll just hang on to it for a while." That happened with Magnetic Fields, too. They hadn't done anything with "Plant White Roses" in 15 years, then they put it on their compendium record last year.

You've obviously carved out a nice career as a sideman of sorts. Growing up were you more drawn to Tonto than the Lone Ranger?

I was definitely more of a Tonto man. I grew up the oldest sister with little brothers and I was always taking care of everybody else. I was also just so shy when I started. I wanted to be near music or performance or theater, but I was too shy to try out for anything, so I was always on the stage crew and stuff like that. I just wanted to sing, and here we are today.

What modern artist would you like to duet ### with that you haven't had the opportunity to at this point?

Ooh, goodness! [Former Miles Davis collaborator] Bob Dorough, definitely. He's a jazz guy. They're making a movie about him called "Devil May Care." Years ago I sold my TV to the drummer from the Black Crowes so he could watch the basketball finals and I got a ticket to New York City to see Bob Dorough.

You're obviously drawn to a lot of classic songwriters. What modern artists are you into? Like are you a closet Justin Bieber fan?

Um, no, I'm not into the Biebs because I was into Donny Osmond as a kid, and he was

Town Hall when I was in New York recently and it was with Suzzy Roche, Lucy Wainwright Roche, Rufus Wainwright and Martha Wainwright, It was like a big family reunion."

New band you don't know personally that deserves to be big?

Avalanche City: "They're from New Zealand and they're really great."

Favorite movie ever?

"Ooh ... ever? I like the 1961 version of 'The Haunting.' Let's say that, but also put down that this was a really difficult question."

Chicago's best music venue?

"Shoot, man. Let's say the Mutiny on Western, because they always want bands and it features the world's longest urinal. That is a niche no other place in Chicago can fill."

kind of the proto-Biebs. I mean, I love the Hold Steady. I love Craig Finn's writing, and I love them as a live band so, so much.

I'm curious what you took away from singing with Mavis Staples.

Oh, man! Mavis is so awesome. She's so positive. I had no idea when I walked in the Wilco loft that day we were recording as one. They were like, "Mavis will be here in a minute." And I was like, "Say what?" I always say it's like she swallowed the sun. She's very radiant and she has a great sense of humor. She's always been doing it. She's moving. She's changing. She's not afraid. That's why I called my record "I Like to Keep Myself in Pain." It's just another way of saying, "Keep yourself out there, for better or worse."

You tended bar at the Hideout, where you worked for nine years beginning in 1998. Do you still know how to make a Wooden Leg?

Of course I do! I've been rehearsing there, because they're so nice, and I go behind the bar and I still know where everything is. Nothing has changed. So hell yes, I could make you a kick-ass wooden leg. You know that used to be called the Hogan, right? My friend invented that drink for me down South, and I drank so many it was called the Hogan. I wanted to have a signature drink for my band the Wooden Leg for our Hideout residency, so I rechristened it, and there you go. ANDY DOWNING IS A REDEYE SPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR.

Generals The Mynabirds

By Sara Stewart

REDEYE SOUND BOARD The Mynabirds' frontwoman, Laura Burhenn, describes the band's sophomore effort, "Generals," as a protest album-specifically, a concept album based on her political frustrations. That comes through loud and clear with lyrics like "I need a political job/ In a blue collar town/ So I can pay my rent" kicking off the

After a few listens, though, I found a lot more than political protest throughout the

and peaceful indie melodies in "Greatest Revenge" to back up her politically charged lyrics. And of course, the loud and angry protest songs such as "Generals" are full of foot-stomps and hand-claps, sultry and vaguely threatening. On repeated listens this diverse collection opens up and emphasizes different tracks each time.

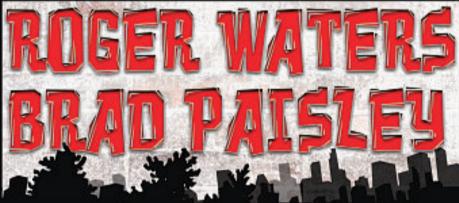

Burhenn again has teamed up with producer Richard Swift, a favorite of mine for his swinging piano and soulful tunes. Swift's influence is most evident in the bouncy piano opening of "Radiator Sister," a playful, catchy song that lingers in your head for days. The pair also worked together on The Mynabirds' 2010 debut, "What We Lose in the Fire We Gain in the Flood," a sadder, more subdued and philosophical album. They successfully navigate a major change in approach, scoring again with "Generals" and its angrier but stillstrong songs of political frustration.

Melvins to attempt world record on tour

Los Angeles Times

Rockers the Melvins have been one of the hardest-working acts in show business for going on three decades now, and for at least the past two they've been on the road almost annually, touring the U.S. and the world.

In fact, during a world tour last year, they lived through two massive earthquakes in two countries—New Zealand and Japan—one of the more impressive feats for a band whose durable but constantly evolving take on hard rock has earned them a devoted cult following and critical acclaim.

It turns out they were just in training mode for this year's tour, during which the band will attempt to break a Guinness World Record for the fastest tour of the U.S. Starting at the Bear Tooth Theatre and Pub in Anchorage, Alaska, on Sept. 5, the Melvins will attempt to perform in all 50 states in 51 days. The tour is set to come to the Double Door on Sept. 21 and will end Oct. 25 in Honolulu.

The band's new album was put out under the moniker Melvins Lite—a three-piece, rather than four, featuring longtime members Buzz Osborne and Dale Crover, with Mr. Bungle bassist Trevor Dunn in place of the duo known as Big Business—and is a departure. Though it has its moments of heaviness, it shows a more experimental, and at times even ethereal, side of the band.

Looking at the itinerary, the Herculean journey before them is rife with perils. After Alaska, the group is to perform the next night in Seattle, then move south to Oregon before heading east through the Plains states, across the Kansas prairie and through the heartland of Iowa, Nebraska and Missouri. An early winter storm or a fall tornado—or an earthquake—could derail them at any moment.

FOR REDEVE

When Jill Valentine realized that more the 12 years of comedy festival Chicago SketchFest's existence, the comedy scene had evolved to include a strong female presence, she approached SketchFest executive producer Brian Posen about creating a sibling festival. Valentine, executive director of the wildly successful Chicago Sketch Comedy Festival since its inception, pitched the idea for a fest featuring female-only sketch comedy groups as well as women in stand-up, vaudeville, improv, musical and other comedy forms.

"With Chicago SketchFest stronger than ever, Brian gave me his blessing, and we hit the ground running," Valentine said. And on Wednesday, she and fellow comedian-assistant producer Liz McArthur introduce the first Chicago Women's Funny Festival, a five-day comic extravaganza featuring 66 shows on three stages with 400 performers total.

With so much to choose from, how do you decide where you find your funny? We've included some day-by-day highlights to get you started.

"Have you ever seen the movie, 'Dances with Wolves?" she asks. "My cornedy is a cross between that and a show I toured with called 'Beauty and the Beast on Ice.'-just kidding!"

THURSDAY

GayCo (8 p.m.)

The LGBT sketch troupe has been a Chicago favorite since its inception 16 years ago. The troupe's men stay home as the ladies of GayCo perform scenes from their current (mixed-sex) show, "Swallow Your Pride," plus some "greatest hits" sketches from past all-female revues. 'One thing you can count on is that gay is the given and not the punchline," said ensemble member Kelly Beeman.

So what's she most looking forward to about headlining in Chi? "A homeless man has been stalking me for like three months now," she says, "I'm excited to come to Chicago and throw off his routine for a couple of days."

Aparna Nancheria (8 p.m.)

"Here's my act in a five-word statement: I can validate for parking." the L.A.-based stand-up comic said. "You must be wondering. "What does parking have to do with your act?' That's a great question-let's find out together." And don't be shy-she considers herself to be quite approachable, from a heckler's point of view.

Tribune Newspapers

Scott Aukerman's popular podcast, "Comedy Bang! Bang!" has turned the traditional celebrity interview on its head, with zany musical numbers and improv-style games. Aukerman, who also wrote for the cult comedy show "Mr. Show With Bob and David" and co-created the Web series "Between Two Ferns With Zach Galifianakis," talks about the future of comedy and the TV version of "Comedy Bang! Bang!" premiering at 9 p.m. Friday on IFC.

"Comedy Bang! Bang!" is part of a new wave of podcasts-turned-TV shows. Is this the future of comedy development?

I do think that podcasts are a great training ground for people to kind of figure out their voice. There's no network or person saying, "Don't say this, don't do that." You can pretty much do them in your house ... so they're a really great place for comedians to figure out what they want to do.

How does "Comedy Bang!" take traditional celebrity interviews in a new direction?

When celebrities go on talk shows, usually they're there for very specific reasons—to promote a film or TV show or comedy special that they're in that week. We made a rule very early on that no one was going to promote anything on the show. And then we made a similar rule that no one was ever going to have a real conversation on the show or talk about anything based in reality. So the interviews are very, very comedy-heavy, they're a lot like the work I do on "Between Two Ferns" where the interviews are there just to be funny.

You've had huge guests on your podcast -everyone from Zach Galifianakis to Jon Hamm and "Weird Al" Yankovic. For the TV show, who-

Who's turned me down? I was trying so hard to get Will Ferrell and Pee-wee Herman and both of them couldn't fit it into their schedules. But Season 2 ...

Who can we expect to see in the first season

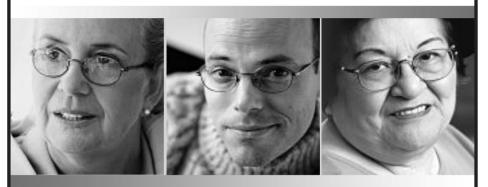

Every single show has the most amount of really funny and really famous people that I could put into it. So the first episode has Zach Galifianakis, Tom Lennon, Will Forte, Gillian Jacobs from "Community" ... and every episode is just a ton of funny people. So even though Seth Rogen may be the main guest, it'll cut over to the side of the stage and Will Arnett and Topher Grace are there getting into an argument for 60 seconds.

Chicago-area bra model hopes to bust into U.K. gig

By Mick Swasko | REDEYE

Michaela "Kavla" Duerson isn't making plans based on if she wins the Curvy Kate Star in a Bra model search. She's making sure things are in order for when she's named the victor.

The 23-year-old from Zion said she wasn't all that surprised to be named in the top 10 for the fuller-cup size lingerie brand Curvy Kate's search for a face and body for the company.

"Some people mistake it for cockiness, but I literally cannot help it," she said.

The contest—which searched the country for bustier women to represent the brand-announced the top 10 finalists last week. The competition seeks to more accurately represent women in America, where the average bra cup size is a 36DD.

With the blessing of her family and a naturally competitive attitude, Duerson said she's ready for her potential big break in modeling.

"It's a dream come true; I am just so happy," she said.

Duerson credits her late uncle-former Chicago Bear Dave Duerson-for much of her competitive spirit. She also said she has her late aunt—who died weeks before Dave Duerson- to thank for her confi-

"No matter how much weight I gained, no matter how much weight I lost, to her I was always 'Barbie,' " she said. "Honestly, this is in honor of both of them."

Voting for the finalists begins June 13 on Curvy Kate's Facebook page, and the winner will be announced June 29. In the meantime, Duerson will fly to New York on Tuesday for her photo shoot.

If, or as she puts it, when, she wins, Duerson will spend time in the U.K.—where Curvy Kate is based-modeling for the brand. She said she's already let her boss know her days might be numbered.

"Nobody is surprised I am doing this; everyone said it was made for me," she said. MSWASKO@TRIBUNE.COM | @MICKSWASKO

How to get fit in 20 minutes

MCT

Can you unearth a spare 20 minutes? They may be masquerading as Internet surfing or lurking within the TV watching you do every evening.

When you find those wayward 1,200 seconds, vou lose vour no-time-to-exercise excuse. Because though most health recommendations are for a half-hour workout daily, a concentrated 20 minutes can suffice quite nicely.

"Do as much as you can in that 20 minutes," says Jakob Vingren, assistant professor in the department of kinesiology, health promotion and recreation at the University of North Texas. "Get as much work done as possible in the allotted time."

At McMaster University in Hamilton, Ontario, researchers studied the effect that intervals - short bursts of intense exercise had on various groups of people. They found that a 20-minute workout consisting of one minute of strenuous activity alternated with a minute of easy recovery, had significant health and fitness effects on unfit volunteers.

How to spend those 20 minutes? Here are two ideas.

CALISTHENICS

Kristin Moses, co-owner of Body Bar fitness studio in Dallas, suggests starting with a 3to 4-minute warm-up by doing 30 seconds of jumping jacks, 30 seconds of high knees, 30 of glute kicks, 30 of jumping jacks.

From there.

go into a series of squats and lunges: 15 squats at moderate tempo, 15 lunges with your right leg and 15 with your left.

"Come to the floor and do 20 to 25 full or modified push-ups. You're moving from your legs, big-muscle groups, to upper-body big muscles and chest, which builds your heart rate and puts you into fat-burning zones."

Next, turn over and sit, hands on the floor behind you. Raise your hips off the floor for 20 to 25 triceps dips.

Repeat the sequence, and this time "pick up your pace," Moses says. The third goround, make it a sprint.

Finish with ab work, she says. Come to the floor and do a plank for 30 seconds to a minute. From there, turn onto your right side and do a side plank. Repeat with the left side.

SWIMMING

Bobby Patten, head coach of Dallas Aquatic Masters, suggests "pyramid sets" - 25 yards fast, then 25 yards easy. Increase distance: 50 fast, 50 easy; 100 fast, 100 easy, resting 10 to 20 seconds between each set.

"You're increasing your metabolism more that way than by just going at 70 percent for a longer time," Patten says. "Any interval I think is beneficial: heart rate high, steady aerobics, then zap it up again. In 20 minutes, you can kill yourself, really feel spent."

Every mile of swimming is equal to about four miles of running, he says.

Making your own sports drink could keep your wallet full

Los Angeles Times

Take a look at the most popular endurance sport drinks and you'll notice a surprising similarity in ingredients.

There are carbohydrates (usually in the form of sugar), sodium, potassium and sometimes a touch of protein.

You'll notice something else—these drinks are expensive. It can cost $1.75 or more to fill one 24-ounce water bottle—and you have to drink a bottle an hour to keep up a good flow of nutrients and liquid while you work out.

There's an easy way around the expense: making your own endurance drink. It may not have all the bells and whistles of the top brands, but it should be more than enough for a long ride or run into the mountains. After all, water is the most crucial ingredient, and it's free.

The base for a good endurance drink is carbohydrates. Most manufacturers use sugar, but that is a problem: Its energy is released quickly and is followed by the dreaded sugar crash.

Hammer Nutrition, one of the top makers of endurance sports drinks, uses a complex

HOW TO MAKE IT

Here's a recipe to make about 2.2 pounds of powder, enough for 17 24-ounce water bottles. Just combine the ingredients in a container with an airtight lid. (It can be messy to make, so be prepared.) You'll need a digital scale to accurately measure the ingredients. Use two 29gram scoops for each water bottle for a total of about 200 calories per bottle.

Maltodextrin: 900 grams Sugar: 80 grams

Kool-Aid: 2 packs Morton Lite Salt: 5 grams Regular salt: 5 grams

Total cost: about 10 cents per 24-ounce water bottle—less than one-tenth of what many highperformance drink powders cost.

carbohydrate called maltodextrin that gradually releases its energy. You can buy maltodextrin in 50-pound sacks from a variety of bulk food and supplement suppliers.

Next come the electrolytes—salt and potassium. Potassium is easily added using Morton Lite Salt, which contains a mix of potassium and sodium.

The last ingredient is Kool-Aid and sugar to add a little flavor and a few extra calories. Remember, this is an endurance drink. It should taste very light. Anything even slightly sweet will leave your mouth feeling sticky on

The final mix tastes slightly tart because of the Kool-Aid. If you like, you can just leave out the Kool-Aid for a more neutral taste. Don't expect the mixture to taste like a commercial sports drink, which typically has much more sugar added.

You can add some protein for exercise of longer than three hours.

PlayStation Vita

Too many games for Sony's nifty new handheld feel like old PlayStation 3 games with gimmicky touchscreen controls awkwardly grafted onto them. But "Gravity Rush" provides a totally unique experience and grants gamers a marvelous sense of flight that no other superhero game can touch. In this new open-world action game you control Kat, a spunky blond protagonist who wakes up with amnesia, a mysterious cat and an amazing ability to defy gravity with an assist from the Vita's gyro sensor. Throw in a beautifully drawn world and a cool comic book-like presentation and it adds up to one of the best surprise games of the year. With apologizes to Sir Isaac Newton, "Gravity Rush" might represent the proverbial apple to fall on gamers' head to help them discover the Vita.

The problem is one of repetition—bursting brains with your fingers on the touchscreen is the chosen method of zombie execution and constantly pinching your thumb and forefinger together gets tiresome after a few levels. And besides a scene that resembles Lower Wacker Drive, the Chicagoness of "Zombie Burst" just isn't there. Was fighting the walking dead on Navy Pier really too much to ask?

Tablet puts Nintendo's Wii U in a sharing mood

A year ago, Nintendo announced the Wii U, the next generation of its massively popular gaming system that incorporates a handheld controller with its own video screen into play with the more traditional Wii console.

On Tuesday at E3, the world's largest videogame gathering, the company still was explaining it—and not sparing any superlatives

"It changes your gaming. It changes how you interact with your gaming friends. And it changes the way you enjoy your TV," said Reggie Fils-Aime, president and CEO of Nintendo of America. "It's not just intuitive, not just accessible to everyone, but it stands to revolutionize your living room."

Having showcased the Wii U hardware at last year's Electronic Entertainment Expo, the focus at Tuesday's Nintendo event was on games: 23 of them, to be exact.

They ranged from "Super Mario Brothers U." the inevitable arrival of Nintendo's most enduring and beloved character, to "Batman Arkham City: Armored Edition," a new take on the popular action franchise.

But while the titles were plentiful, the real focus was on how the Wii U will make them different. At the forefront is what the company is calling "asymmetric game play."

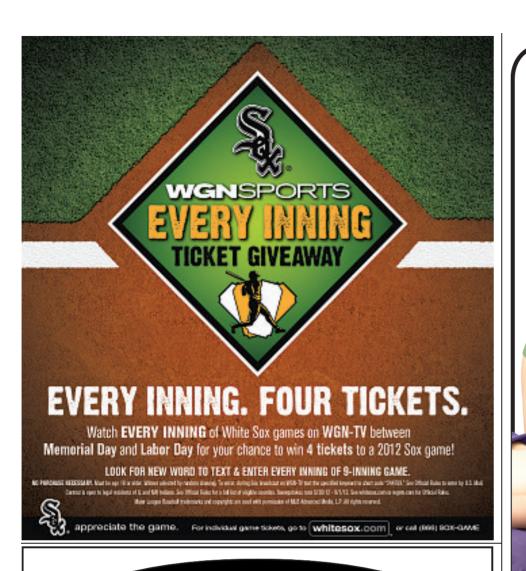

What that means is that a player using the system's new handheld controller-it looks like a tablet computer, with a screen and buttons-can share the same game with other players who are using traditional keypads. But that player's objectives and experience will be

"The player with the game pad takes on a special role," said Katsuya Eguchi, the developer of "NintendoLand," a game that will combine characters and settings from 12 Nintendo titles into one "greatest hits" game. "It's playing the same game world as the other players, but with a different perspective, different information and a completely different

In one of those mini-games, "Luigi's Ghost Mansion," up to four players using traditional controllers play as ghost hunters, while another with one of the new game pads is the ghost. The "ghost" sees more than the other players on the pad's video screen and plays against the others.

The Nintendo event marked the second straight day that one of the three major gaming console makers used the big stage of E<sub>3</sub> to focus on "second screen" gaming. On Monday, Microsoft unveiled its SmartGlass system, which lets players use their tablets or smartphones in conjunction with its Xbox 360.

Other titles announced for the system included "Wii Fit U," a new version of the exercise program that has sold more than 43 million copies; "Sing," a karaoke game that lets players user the new game pad to read lyrics; and, in a nod to hard-core gamers, "Mass Effect 3," the latest in the acclaimed role-playing game series.

Sony unleashes the gore with new titles

CNN

With a nod to the future, Sony paid tribute to the gamer and revealed new, power-packed and very bloody titles at the Electronic Entertainment Expo in L.A. on Monday.

Promising "next generation experiences," Sony Computer Entertainment of America president Jack Tretton introduced new games aimed at mature audiences: "The Last of Us," "God of War: Ascension" and "Beyond: Two Souls." The video and game play for each were evocative, brutal and bloody with action and drew gasps and cringes.

"This is the Super Bowl for those of us in the game industry," Tretton said. "This year, Sony wants to pay tribute to the gamers."

There were no great reveals or announcements about new hardware, despite persistent rumors that a new PlayStation 4 might be on the horizon. Much of the event focused on integration between the PlayStation 3 and the handheld PlayStation Vita and the mention of a new service called PlayStation Mobile that will bring the PS experience to mobile phones and tablets.

Tretton said there will be 60 new titles for the Vita next year and PlayStation 1 titles also will be available for play on the handheld console. One new title, "PlayStation All-Stars Battle Royale," can be played on the home console and the Vita at the same time.

"We are investing heavily [in] cross-play [playing on PS3 and Vita simultaneously]," Tretton said. "People can play whenever and wherever they want with cross-play. The Vita also becomes an enhanced controller for the PS<sub>3</sub>."

There will also be exclusive titles for the Vita, such as "Call of Duty: Black Ops Declassified" and "Assassin's Creed III: Liberation," featuring a female lead assassin. Jessica Chobot, correspondent for G4TV's "Attack of the Show" said she was impressed with the new game play for "Assassin's Creed III."

"I'm the kind of gamer that looks for story. I'm a big RPG [role-playing game] fan, so things that have a really good story for me carry more weight for me as a gamer," she said. "The fact they have a sea battle is really cool."

Lwould want to go to the future, 25 years in the future. and see if the Cubs ever win a World Series."

-"New Girl" actor and Chicago native Jake Johnson, to vulture. com, on what he would do with the power of time travel, a central topic in his upcoming movie "Safety Not Guaranteed"

The would-be kings and gueens have gone to war to take the Iron Throne in HBO's "Game of Thrones." Ownership appears to be a lot easier for fans of the hit series. HBO is selling life-size replicas of the coveted seat of power for a mere $30,000 apiece at its Web store. Oh, and an additional $1,800 for shipping and handling. Here are the specs.

Height: 7 feet, 2 inches Depth: 5 feet, 11 inches Width: 5 feet, 5 inches Weight: 350 pounds Materials: Hand-finished. hand-painted fiberglass. Fire-proof resin.

« HOT DATE

As in Monday. That's when movietickets. com plans to begin preselling tickets to "The Dark Knight Rises" in select theaters, deadline.com reports. The movie opens July 20.

Peacock love

So much for the notion that TV critics look down their noses at broadcast networks. In its second annual Critics Choice Awards nominations, the Broadcast Television Journalists Association showered the most recognition on "Community" and its network, NBC. "Community" had six nominations, and AMC's "Mad Men" followed with five.
